After all, driving a forklift is dangerous. It looks easy to operate but when improperly handled, it could cause serious accident and injury. This is the reason why taking forklift safety training is vital for every company that uses this equipment. Where else the training can be taken? At the forklift driving school. You may not notice that there is one near you. The forklift driving school can be a career center, a community college or a trade school that provides such training. Its primary role is to teach students how to operate the forklift in a safe and proper technique. If you are an individual or an employer who is searching for a driving school where you can take the forklift training, for that matter, we can help you find one near you. We have the directory of schools in every state or territory, just choose the location or country where you are situated below, you will find the lists there. Select Your State If You Are in Other Country: Canada Australia United Kingdom Aside from the directory, we also prepared helpful guides to assist you on your journey. Just browse through our blog and FAQs sections, there you will find pieces of information to help you get certified. You can also read this article about choosing training school: How To Choose The Best Forklift Training School? Advantages of Enrolling at Forklift Driving School Employers that have any type of forklifts must provide safety training to their operators. Some of the benefits that can be reaped from attending the training are: The school has training programs suited to beginner's needs. If you are a novice and planning to start a career as a forklift operator or you just want to get additional skill driving forklifts, the school can give you the knowledge you need to get on the job in no time. The driving school has the curriculum suited for experienced individuals who want to get a skill upgrade. Specialized training programs such as the train-the-trainer and leadership programs can be given to those who are planning to advance their careers. The forklift driving school can help the employer avoid hefty fines and penalties imposed a government regulatory body such as OSHA, for example. By sending the workers to the school to receive safety training, the employer is complying with the government rules and regulations. The employer has just to make sure to keep the training records of the workers. You can show these documents when the inspector pays a visit in the workplace. These are your proofs of compliance so that you would not be cited with a violation The employer has the option to conduct forklift safety training on-site. You can make an arrangement with the driving school about your requirement and hire a trainer from them to do the actual training in the workplace. The on-site training is the best way the training should be done because the trainer can modify the course to suit with the condition of the workplace, the behavior of the workers, and safety program in place. Some training schools or career centers will help individuals find work after they've completed a forklift training course. These schools have connections with job agencies to place certified students into employment. Find one that offers such job placement assistance, this is of course for your advantage, you won't be having a hard time finding a job. Forklift driving schools such as those private companies can deliver online certification. The online training is not a recommended way, if you ask us, because of its obvious disadvantage (practical training is not possible), but still many are opting to go through this approach. If you are busy and can't find an available time, you can opt to choose online certification. If you want to know is online forklift training is right for you, you can read this article: Is Forklift Certification Online Right For You? Forklift Driving Can Be Dangerous Statistics showed that there are dozens of fatalities and hundreds of injuries occurred each year caused by forklifts. This is the primary reason why OSHA had been and will be stringent in the implementation of 29 CFR 1910.178 standards. So, what are the hazards associated with driving forklifts? The most common forklift accident is turnover. A forklift can easily turn over if it is improperly driven. It should not be loaded more than its rated capacity, with its forks raised up high, or if it is traveling with its load not well balanced. Hence, the stability triangle is being taught during a classroom lecture. Another common forklift accident is pedestrian being struck by the truck. This is a common occurrence especially when the forklift operator and other nearby worker are not paying attention to each other in the workplace. This accident could happen when the workplace is crowded with people and operating area is confined. Fatality takes place when the victim is crushed by the massive forklift. Fork truck weighs several hundreds of kilograms, no wonder if the victim is crushed by this heavy equipment, there's almost no chance of surviving. Community College vs. Trade School: Which Want Would You Choose Before you even considering enrolling in a training class, have you wondering where is best to take the training, will it be in a trade school or in community college? Knowing the difference between these two will help you know what you are getting yourself into. They differ in the programs they offer. The community colleges have a wide choice of programs not only in the field of forklift operation but in many aspects as well. If you would like to take a forklift operator training and you decide to extend your education, you can opt to take heavy equipment operation program which a more comprehensive program offered by a community college. The trade school has a continuous enrollment in forklift operation program where you can enroll anytime you want, however, in community college, they offer such program periodically. They give more focus on practical training than in theory which means you'll spend much of your time in hands-on operation but this doesn't mean classroom lectures are less important. You both need classroom and practical training in order to get trained. While trade school focuses on a specific skill. If you strive to be a trained forklift operator, attending a trade school will gain you a specialized skill you need for the job. Trade school has employer connection. They do maintain a relationship with employers so that when these employers require manpower, they can easily source from the trade school. This will make it easy for you to find a job, the trade school, where you took your training from, can refer you to an employer for possible employment. Gaining the required education, there is not a single size that fits everybody. It is still up to you where you want to get trained. Do You Need Personal Protective Equipment? Grab These Special Deals Driving School Will Teach You Everything You Need to Know The forklift driving school will help you on your path to pass the certification test. Training includes classroom discussion and practical hands-on training. Both of these are crucial portions of the training in order for the trainees to acquire the knowledge to be compliant with the law and to get certified driving forklifts. In other countries such as Australia, forklift driving schools are commonly referred to as registered training organisaton (RTO). The RTO serves as a provider of vocational education and training to students who want to take nationally recognized training. RTO could be a privately-owned company or government-run institution. In the UK, before a driving school can operate business, they should first be accredited by one of the accrediting bodies: Road Transport Industry Training Board (RTITB), Construction Industry Training Board (CITB), Lantra National Training Organisation Ltd. (LANTRA), Independent Training Standards Scheme and Register (ITSSAR), Association of Industrial Truck Trainers (AITT) and National Plant Operators Registration Scheme (NPORS). As previously mentioned, employers can receive training onsite for their workers. By having the forklift training conducted in the actual workplace, it makes it more flexible to alter the training curriculum to correspond with the prevailing condition of the workplace. Where Can You Take Free Forklift Training & Get a License Near You? Where else, in a community college near you. One of the reasons why you should consider going to one is that community colleges commonly conduct free forklift training for the local residents. If you want to know if there are training schedules, just visit their website or their campus. A representative will assist you. When you make an inquiry, ask what are the requirements and if you can register as early as possible; do it so, as there are only a limited number of students they accept. If the campus if far from you, the community college normally has satellite offices located throughout the community, find an office near you and do make an inquiry there about the prerequisites of the forklift training. If you want to get free forklift training, just connect to the internet and there you can find a wealth of easily accessible websites that teach forklift safety training, just like this one. Though I would not recommend this as this will only teaches you the classroom part of the course. To become certified, you need to take both the classroom and practical training and be assessed by a competent trainer which is usually done in-person. Hands-On Forklift Training is What Lacking When You Do Take It Online I strongly encourage you not to take the forklift training through an online course as this will only tackle classroom training. This will not officially certify you even they say you can print or download your license or certificate at the end of the course. Don't fall to promises of the training provider that offers such a course. Just like the reason I mentioned above, in order to be a certified forklift operator, you need to take the classroom instructions, practical training, and performance assessment. This can only be done if you enroll in a course offered by a community college, vocational school or trade center near you. Forklift training only lasts for a day or two and only costs a couple to several hundreds of dollars, it won't hurt you. I strongly encourage every one of you to spend a small amount of time and investment in getting certified. Criteria You Should Follow When Taking Paid Forklift Training Classes To get your money's worth, here are some of the criteria you should follow when choosing a forklift training school to attend the class. Find a class with a small number of students – overcrowded class tends to be noisy and frustrating for both students and instructor. Having a fewer number of people in the room means that each one gets the attention of the instructor. Enroll in a small class to get the focus and attention so that you won't get left behind. Find a school with modern training facility and equipment – we all know that there is a great importance of school facility in improving the teaching method. The teaching environment and equipment used are essential to provide the best quality education possible to students. Find a school with a modern training facility and forklift equipment; now, to ensure that you enrolling in the right school that has such, visit their campus, observe the premises. Ask permission first, if you want to pay a visit. You may be targeting a forklift job you've seen in an advertisement. Read through the job requirements, list down what you've seen, ask the school if they can provide you with that. A school with good credential will supply you everything you need to know. Find a training school that helps students in terms of career guidance and job placement - the school should not only provide the students with the technical knowledge of forklift operation but also prepare the students for employment. In some cases, they will also place the student for a job. Conclusion Forklift driving school is where workers learn formal education on how to drive a forklift in a safe and efficient manner. They supply the knowledge and skills needed to get the job done. If you are thinking of going to a training school, just browse the directory we prepared.
